KATHLEEN JACOBS (b. 1958)

Kathleen Jacobs' depictions of time, light, atmosphere and weather patterns are quite literal in that her process becomes a physical record of all. The artist wraps her linen canvases on the trunks of different arbor species, leaving them exposed to the elements over months or years. She returns to them periodically to apply layers of pigment and oil stick using frottage to trace the relief of the wood grains that act as support to the canvases. The linens absorb multi-layers of pigments hand-applied by the artist which get combined with Mother Nature's patina, creating beautifully atmospheric compositions. When the weathered canvases are removed from the outdoors and taken into the artist's studio, they continue to absorb pigments which are rubbed on the front and the back of the canvases. Once stretched, the canvases are re-oriented so that the bark markings run horizontally across the canvas, becoming reminiscent of cloud patterns or waves on bodies of water. Jacobs is also an acrobatic pilot, so it is no coincidence that her paintings share her views from the heights above and are titled after fixed navigation points in the sky. Jacobs has had a prolific career with numerous solo and group exhibitions in the United States and Europe. Her works were installed at The Mount in Lenox, Massachusetts and have been extensively documented in film and written about. The artist lives and works in Massachusetts.
